THROUGH TO PROCESSING, REVIEW
AND PRODUCTION

Millnet can become an extension of your in-house team and work seamlessly with your external counsel to help you take control of every stage of the ediscovery process

As data created by companies continues to proliferate, the ediscovery challenges faced by general counsel to manage legal costs and risk increase accordingly. Whether it is during litigation, responding to regulators, or running an internal investigation, Millnet can become an extension of your in-house team and work seamlessly with your external counsel to help you take control of every stage of the process.

By partnering with Millnet, you can avoid the need to undertake the selection process every time you have an ediscovery obligation, or having to instruct external counsel to do so. You can take advantage of our secure hosting facility which allows you to review the same data multiple times for different cases, and save time, minimise disruption, and reduce cost by avoiding numerous data collections.

Millnet, an Advanced Discovery company, is the largest and longest established UK based ediscovery and legal document services firm. As part of the Advanced Discovery group, Millnet now extends its reach with full international coverage across 16 European, Middle East and US offices and 4 global data centres.

CASE STUDY

Millnet works with multi-national company in large multi-jurisdictional litigation matter

The background

Millnet was approached by a large multi-national company regarding an upcoming litigation. Our ediscovery consultants worked with the company's in-house legal team and their external lawyers to understand the details of the case and what the lawyers were trying to achieve. We scoped out what data sources were likely to be relevant and how best to collect the data in a forensically sound manner whilst minimising costs and organisational disruption, and ensuring unnecessary data was not collected.

Following consultation it was determined that data needed to be collected from Peru, Germany and multiple sites in the UK.

The challenge

We were required to attend each site simultaneously to collect the data. Due to data privacy rules the data in Germany had to be pre-filtered onsite by Millnet to minimise any personal documentation leaving the client's site.

The solution

Millnet sent a forensic collections teams to each location. A total of 2,500,000 documents were collected from the three countries. The data from the UK and Peru collections were sent straight to our secure and ISO27001 certified data centre for processing. The data from Germany was pre-filtered onsite prior to processing.

To minimise the number of documents for first pass review and to ensure maximum efficiency, key words were agreed and run across the data and the documents were de-duplicated – this reduced the document set to 1,500,000.

Working with one of our certified Relativity Analytics Experts we utilised Analytics within Relativity including email chain analysis, data clustering and near duplicate functionality. This enabled us to reduce the number of unique documents for review from 1,500,000 to 800,000.

Millnet assisted with the first pass relevancy review which resulted in a total of 75,000 documents identified as being potential relevant. These documents were then sent to external counsel so they could review and issue tag the documents as required.

The Outcome

Through utilising Relativity technology which resulted in a lower cost resource for the first pass review, the corporate client saved over £1.5 million in review costs:

- Initial data collection of 2,500,000 document
- Reduced to 1,500,000 documents through data range filtering, keyword application and de-duplication
- Further reduction of documents to 800,000 using Relativity Analytics functionality
- Only 75,000 documents remaining after first pass relevancy review by the client and Millnet
